Event: Plenary
Chair: Hon Justice Williams, NZ Supreme Court
Panellists:
Aileen Kavanagh, Trinity College Dublin
Janet McLean, University of Auckland
Even in countries with a codified constitutional text, there are 'unwritten' principles, political norms, and constitutional conventions which frame and shape constitutional behaviour. In this session, we will discuss the challenges of 'excavating unwritten constitutionalism' and unearthing the unwritten norms on which all constitutions are based. Drawing on examples from around the globe, including the interweaving of tikanga Maori with the common law for a more pluralist Aotearoa New Zealand, we will discuss the ways in which constitutional change can occur by accretion and evolution rather than formal amendment.

One of the most important yet understudied topics in comparative public law concerns the varied interactions between Indigenous and introduced legal systems. This session will survey and seek to draw lessons from a variety of settler-colonies and decolonised states, including: efforts to move towards a pluralist constitution (Aotearoa New Zealand); the tension between the competing projects of state modernisation and the development of an Indigenous jurisprudence (Samoa); the everyday challenges and manifestations of legal pluralism (Torres Strait Region, Australia); and Indigenous participation in constituent processes (Chile).

Panellists:

Maria Bargh, Victoria University of Wellington

Margaret Young, The University of Melbourne

This session will explore the nature of different responses to the climate crisis (including the interactions between the climate, trade, and human rights), and the relevance of indigenous law and values in the development of those responses. In particular, the session will consider the ways in which transitions to a low emission economy ought to be informed by indigenous law and government obligations toward indigenous peoples. In Aotearoa, this would require consideration of Tikanga Māori, Te Tiriti o Waitangi and the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.

The Ubiquity of Legal Pluralism and its Consequences

Legal pluralism involves the co-existence of multiple forms of law within society. This lecture presents a framework for understanding legal pluralism and its consequences across a range of contexts, from the European Union to Pacific Island nations. Professor Tamanaha will describe historical and contemporary reasons for legal pluralism and address key issues, including how to identify law, problems with incorporating customary law in state law, clashes between human rights and customary law and religious law, and other matters that arise in relation to legal pluralism.
